

Research Tip – eBooks

I am happy to report, in case you haven't yet heard, that we have added Lexis eBooks to the list of electronic resources available to you in the law library. All Court Staff and Alaska Bar members may check out eBooks for use at home or at the office, at any time, from any location. You'll have 24/7 access to these titles and, more importantly, Judges, Court staff, and lawyers in Nome, Sitka, Kenai, and anywhere else, will have the same access as those in Anchorage (without having to wait for the book to be sent to you). Lexis is the only major publisher offering a lending platform at this time, and the Lexis Digital Library includes nearly every Lexis title we have in print.

Lexis uses the same platform as the State Library's Listen Alaska service. If any of you have checked out eBooks through the public library, you already know how easy it is to use the platform. You can open the book in your browser and copy directly into your work document (with the usual copyright caveats). You can highlight or make notes on the text, and these notes will pop back up if you check the book out again at a later date (while never being visible to other users). You can also access the book online, or download it to your computer, your e-reader, or your mobile device.

To check out and use eBooks all Court Staff and Bar Members will need a library ID number and a PIN. Court Staff ID numbers will be based on employee ID numbers, while Attorney ID numbers will be based on bar numbers. PINs can be any four-digit number you choose. To set up your account, simply visit us in one of the staffed library branches, call us in Anchorage, or send us an email. We can also help you use eBooks and the borrowing platform, so be on the lookout for training announcements.

After you have registered you can sign in to the eBook website to look at the eBooks in our collection, as well as run a video overview.

The general public, library users who are not court staff or members of the Alaska Bar, will be able to access the Lexis eBooks by logging on at a public access computer in one of our law library branches during regular library hours. They will not be able to check out any eBooks or get remote access.
